Criminal Background Check

George Mason University is modifying University Policy Number 2221 (Criminal Background Investigations). The new policy will require all new employees and all current employees who change positions to undergo criminal background checks. The old policy specified the employment categories and offices that require such checks. They included all staff and most administrative faculty positions. Due to outside certification requirements, faculty teaching in the College of Health and Human Services and the College of Science were also subject to background checks. The new policy will extend the check to all new faculty, staff, and admin faculty for whom a check has not been completed in the last three years, including those who leave the university and then are rehired. Employees who are simply promoted in their present positions will not be required to have a background check completed. Also, anyone who signed a contract with the university prior to June 25 is exempt from a check unless it was already part of their hiring process.

According to Linda Harber, Associate Vice President and CHRO of Human Resources and Payroll, all major universities in Virginia except Old Dominion University either presently have a policy like the new one being implemented or are in the process of implementing one. The change in policy at Mason and some other institutions is, in part, the result of the recent incidents at Penn State.

The policy change was developed by Linda Harber and senior administrative staff. The first major planning meeting occurred on April 5, 2012. With the unfolding revelation of child molestation at Penn State, there was some urgency to complete the process quickly. Faculty and staff were not invited to participate in the planning process. Any concerns or feedback with the policy can be shared with Jessica Cain (jcain4@gmu.edu) in Employee Relations.

The background check process occurs as follows. As part of hiring or position-changing, the employee must agree to a criminal background check. That action is a condition of employment or job change. The university then uses the services of an online company named HireRight. This company completes (a) a Social Security Trace which reveals the names and addresses associated with the social security number, (b) a search of the Sex Offenders Registry and Prohibited Parties (terror watch) List, and (c) a criminal search that reveals felony and misdemeanor convictions (not arrests or accusations) within the last seven years. Minor traffic violations are exempted. Once the check is complete, results are kept in a locked file in HR, apart from the individual’s personnel file, and never shared with a third party under any circumstances. Jessica Cain and Christine Harchick in HR Employee Relations are responsible for initiating the checks.

The cost to the university varies between about $42 and $70 per check, averaging about $50, and this is paid centrally, not from the budget of the hiring unit. The total annual cost for completing this process is difficult to estimate. According to Jessica Cain, the university had about 500 new hires last year, meaning the cost for this category of employee is about $25,000. However, this number does not include present employees who changed positions and staff/volunteers associated with camps.

If the search results in the finding of a criminal conviction or other issue, the individual will have a confidential one-on-one meeting with a member of Employee Relations. This meeting allows the employee the opportunity to verify the results and inform Employee Relations of any ongoing appeals. Concerns can potentially be discussed with the position’s supervisor and, if deemed necessary by the department, with individuals higher on the employment chain and the university’s General Counsel’s Office. A negative finding would not normally result in non-hiring or non-promotion. Usually, unless the conviction occurred in an area that might compromise the ability to complete the individual’s assigned duties, the person would be hired or the job change would go through.
The change in the policy is not the result of any significant problems at Mason. No faculty and only a small number of staff have been released or not hired as a result of criminal background checks. The reason for most of those is that the individuals did not disclose their convictions. Disclosure is required by both the old and new policies. In addition, there have been no cases to date in which a successful candidate has refused to approve a check and therefore not been hired.
