

MISSION STATEMENT:

The India and Globalization Working Group (IGWG) seeks to bring together a cross-disciplinary community of scholars, from both within George Mason University and the wider academic community of the Nation's capital, working on issues related to the globalization process in India. Some of the key interests of the group include questions of identity and personhood in post-liberalization India, restructured work spaces and relationships, visual imagery of a burgeoning consumer society, and a critical inquiry into the emancipatory rhetoric surrounding the globalization process in India. The working group's goal is to contribute to empirical research and engage in current debates about the globalization process taking shape in India. It also seeks to inform and engage the larger community by inviting guest speakers, publishing original research, having panel discussions and workshops, and showing films related to globalization and its effects on India.
